President Trump asserted on Tuesday that any Jewish person who votes for a Democrat shows "total lack of knowledge or great disloyalty." As a loyal Jew, I am deeply offended but not surprised.

Most Jews voted against Trump in 2016. More importantly, we know far more about Judaism and Israel than our uninformed President.

It should be noted that not all Jews agree about Israel's policies; hence, we recognize that Trump simply is trying to divide us and weaponize religion for personal political gain—something that might rally his base but will not increase his support among Jews.
Dan Rather correctly explained how Trump employed an historical Anti-Semitic trope: "Let's be crystal clear. When President Trump says that Jews who vote for Democrats show 'either a total lack of knowledge or great disloyalty,' he is summoning the forces of bigotry and anti-Semitism with all of its blood-stained history."

Therefore, perhaps we should respond to President's statement by saying: Any Republican who continues to support and vote for Trump should have no qualms about allowing their children to emulate his Anti-Semitic and racist rhetoric.

Let's never forget Maya Angelou's warning: "When someone shows you who they are, believe them."
