

Interested in learning more about media ethics?

Want to be even more prepared for graduate school or a great job?

Apply for the Media Ethics Citizen Scholars Program

Media Ethics Citizen Scholars are part of the Intellectual Entrepreneurship Pre-Graduate School Internship program. This internship is open to students in all UT colleges, schools, and departments. You may earn 1-3 academic credits (CMS 164M/264M/364M) by participating in the internship program.

What activities do Media Ethics Citizen Scholars take part in?

- They attend at least three exciting events on campus discussing media ethics during the semester
- They work with a graduate student or faculty mentor to design a project connected to issues in media ethics. Examples might include: blog posts on pressing topics in media ethics, preparing a research paper, presenting original research, and more

What do Media Ethics Citizen Scholars get from this program?

- Scholars will be recognized on the Media Ethics Initiative website (mediaethicsinitiative.org)
- Scholars will learn more about the ethical dilemmas and media ethics in a their area or industry of interest
- Scholars may also be eligible for a Kuhn Intellectual Entrepreneurship Award. This award is designed to encourage first generation and economically disadvantaged undergraduate students to pursue their academic passions and to consider graduate study (funding may be used for: traveling to conferences, potential graduate school visits, research endeavors, supplies, books, etc.)
- Scholars from Moody College of Communication and other participating colleges at UT are eligible for travel funds to attend an academic conference with their mentor

Applications for the Media Ethics Citizen Scholars Program can be submitted at any time up to the fourth class session of the semester in which a student wishes to enroll.
